THIS PAGE: Testing time at Burbank. Work went on around the clock at Lockheed to ensure the flow of first-rate fighting machines to the combat fronts. This meant constant engine runs and testing of armament — such as seen in this photograph of a Lockheed worker firing a P-38's four .50-cal machine guns and single 20mm cannon. Back in 1944, no one complained — such noise was the sound of freedom. Unfortunately, today we would probably see numerous lawsuits complaining about "rights being violated." (Alpha Archive)
